TAU PHI HOLDS OPEN MEETING

Members of the faculty and a number of students were entertained Wednesday night in Reid parlor at the annual open meeting of Tau Phi. Once a year the members of Tau Phi invite a number of guests to hear a program given by themselves.

The program this year consisted of three papers presented by Misses Kathryn Blake, Gwendolyn Olcott, and Nora Lee Antrim. Miss Blake gave a survey of the work that has been done by Professor Frederick Koch of the University of North Carolina in his play-making. The play-makers have received much attention recently in dramatic circles because they are a unique organization in the college community, making and producing their own plays. Paul Green is probably the most famous exponent of this group. He is the author of "In Abraham's Bosom."

Miss Olcott talked interestingly on Commander Richard E. Byrd and his arctic expeditions. It seems particularly suitable that we should keep up with the achievement of one of Virginia's most famous living sons.

Miss Antrim read parts of the beautiful introduction to the "Americanization of Edward Bok," and told us more about the "picture towns." A good many people have never heard of this bird sanctuary and those who do know about it are interested in hearing more. The New York Times printed a picture last week showing President Coolidge, Mr. Hoover and Mr. Bok at (Continued on third page.)

Dr. Edmund Soper Will Give Sunday Sermon

On Sunday, March 3, Dr. Edmund D. Soper, President of Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, will give the sermon in chapel.

Dr. Soper was last year Dean of Theology at Duke University. His inauguration as President of Ohio Wesleyan took place on February 15, on which occasion the college was represented by Miss Eugenie Moreau.

Dr. Soper has an enviable reputation as a speaker and preacher; it will be a great privilege to us to hear him next Sunday.

Sweet Briar A True Amazonia, Says Sforza

"From the Vale of Lombardy" to "Amazonia in Venezuela" came Count Sforza to lecture on Friday night, February 22. His impressions of this country and particularly of Sweet Briar, which have been gained from his conversation with Miss Lois Gibbons, are interesting and particularly charming to members of the community who enjoy an occasional new outlook on our surroundings.

Count Sforza's first visit to the United States occurred last summer, when he was a participant in the Williamson Institute of Politics. At that time he lectured at The University of Virginia, on Jefferson. He pronounced the University one of the most beautiful places in the world by virtue of its perfect simplicity and harmony.

In statesmanship he called Cavour the maker of modern Italy and quoted this statement: "Even the stupidest person can rule by martial law." In speaking of Germany the Count

COUNT CARLO SFORZA

COUNT CARLO SFORZA SPEAKS ON ITALY

Count Carlo Sforza, last Friday night, gave Sweet Briar an address in which he spoke of the intellectual and moral Italian life. He said that Italy, because of her past, had no exact analogy to any other country.

Count Sforza briefly reviewed some of Italy's history, beginning with the thirteenth century. There were some men then, like St. Francis of Assisi, who loved life, and who show us the Italian type at its best. Dante too was an exceptional personality. Yet in those times there was a great deal of intolerance, and misunderstanding, even of such men. Later, however, people became more tolerant, and we find such men as Boccaccio and Petrarch. The church had become corrupt during this while, and devout men like Fra Angelico, were rare. We find in Raphael's works the perfection of pagan beauty.

In the sixteenth century any crimes were legitimate in order to keep power. Machiavelli in his "Prince" points toward maintenance of power, and shows us in this writing the corrupt spirit of Italian politics in his day. People were grappling for power and the Pope was clinging tightly to his independence.

Religion has always held an uncommonly great influence over Italian life. So deeply are those old ideas imbedded, as traditions, and so long have the people looked up to the Pope that they have become bewildered at the diversion of their loyalty to Italy and to the Pope.

The greatest men in Italy have loved Italy but also other countries. Count Sforza is a great admirer of Cocco. He calls him the greatest literary philosopher in the world. Cocco represents the constant currents of life and shows accomplishment made in Italy in the last thirty years.

Italy is not a rich country, and having few raw materials, relies on men. When the Italian is at his best he is very beautiful; indeed, Sforza says. And this type can only grow up under freedom. It needs liberty for its development.

Moral life must be more than efficiency. Efficiency is like a motor car which, when it smashes, is all gone. A four-in-hand can lose one part and still go on. Italy is a four-in-hand, he says.

Count Sforza's talk was made very interesting by his personal references to his life in Italy.

Martinielli, the "ace of tenors" will appear in Lynchburg at the Smith Memorial auditorium, Friday, March 1st, at 8:30 p. m.

Gianni Martinielli, the famous tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has won great acclaim all over his native Italy, Brussels, London, and finally, here in America, where he has risen to the position of principal tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Among his popular roles are the leading parts of such operas as "Aida," "Carmen," "Cenerentola," "Faust," "Tosca," "Rigoletto," etc. Martinielli arouses enthusiasm wherever he sings. Church Committee Meeting With Interesting Cases

In one of the tumble-down dwellings near Sweet Briar there is living at this very moment, a family of eight people, consisting of the father, mother, and six children. The father has had occasion to become very well acquainted with jail because of his repeated bootlegging offenses and the mother is a dope addict. When the father was not in jail, he cut logs but he did not earn enough here to feed and clothe his family. The mother was sent to Staunton at one time to take a cure for her dope habit but when she returned to her home its dismal atmosphere soon led her to fall into her former practices again, and of course her children were neglected.

Their home, up until this fall, was a poorly furnished cabin in the woods. Behind it was a pig-pen and the water supply came from a nearby stream which was very often muddy. The children could not attend school because they did not have enough clothes.

"Then, to cap the climax," the shack was destroyed by fire this fall and the whole family was forced to become dependent upon a neighboring farmer of little more prosperity for its food and shelter.

When Amberg people investigated the case, they found only a rathole and a small bit of flour as the sole food supply of the cabin. When the case was brought to the attention of the Sweet Briar Church Committee, the mother was threatened with a second trip to Staunton for another cure and this made her decide to work to make a real home for her children. At Christmas time the Committee provided clothes and a toy for each of the children, as well as food for them all and the joy of the family knew no bounds. This case is only one of the many similar cases which have been brought to the attention of the Church Committee by people who are interested in helping the many needy families of the county. The

This Saturday afternoon Sweet Briar will play Westhampton College in its last basketball game of the season.

The game will be played on the Lynchburg Y. W. court at 3:00 o'clock, and the Westhampton team will be the guests at dinner of the Sweet Briar team that evening.

In view of the fact that Sweet Briar lost to Williams and Mary two weeks ago, the team is going to put forth every effort to beat their old rivals. They went into Lynchburg to practice on Monday night on the Lynchburg College floor, and with several practices this week, they are in hopes of achieving victory on Saturday.

WHAT IS N. S. P. A.?

In case there is any ignorance as to what our new emblem of the N. S. P. A. represents it signifies that the NEWS is now a charter member of the National Scholastic Press Association. It is a cooperative organization established for the purpose of furthering the interests of all forms of collegiate and scholastic journalism. It was formed in 1921 with headquarters at Madison, Wisconsin, and a year ago it was reorganized and expanded into a National organization instead of a Central one as it had been.

To this organization belong the university, college, junior college, normal school, high school, junior high school, and private school newspapers, magazines, and year books. Such memberships are by individual publications, not by schools. The services of the association include the following: A yearly All-American Critical Service and Contest, which is a critical analysis of each publication which is a member of the association; the conducting of a question and answer bureau in which problems are presented in the form of specific, not general questions which the individual publication must handle; the extending of help to all organized groups of members interested in the advancement of scholastic journalism; the holding of a national convention which aims to be in reality a short course in scholastic publishing and editing. The association has a magazine, the Scholastic Editor, in which the results of these studies and all sorts of announcements of interest to members appear.

The N. S. P. A. has also interesting contests for newspapers, magazines and year books. It attempts to have equality of consideration and competition assured by the classification of entries according to the kind of school and the enrollment. All the publications are graded according to ratings—All-American Honor Rating, First Class Honor Rating, Second Class Honor Rating, etc. With these ratings suggestions are sent to the different members concerning methods by which the improvement of each publication may be achieved.

The SWEET BRIAR NEWS is now a year and a half old, practically a "child" still, and very proud of its new membership to a National organization which will bring it new contacts and ought to enlarge greatly its possibilities.

MUD-SLINGING!

Some people "slang mud" when they are in a bad humor or are very much displeased with somebody or something. But at Sweet Briar we sling it merrily and with a smile; we wade ankle deep in it and almost like it.

But there's a reason of course; there's a promise of green lawn, neat paths and a handsome library to carry us over the period of homely, discouraging red mud. The extra steps that are necessary because of the fences and ditches that cut us off from the shortest way to the post office or a class are a small sacrifice in comparison to what we will enjoy after a period of months.

The new library is a goal we've all been driving to reach for a long time, and now that it is in sight no amount of inconvenience along the way shall prevent us from coming up the home-stretch gallantly. So wade and smile, everybody; for soon the mud will be gone forever!

May Queen election has come and gone. Wednesday night proved to be very gala and Belle was escorted to the train for a week-end trip by the "Chung Mung," a few intimate friends, and also by two Freshmen.

The announcement of Lindbergh's engagement has been viewed and commented upon from every possible angle, but the latest and most prized remark comes from an unexpected source—a member of the music department. He is reputed to have remarked, "Well, that leaves only the Prince of Wales and Dr. Connor."

We wonder if Miss Shumleiff has Effie bring after-dinner coffee to her every night in Randolph or Gray parlor. We presume that she does if she goes so far as to request that she be served her demitasse en salon, chez Willis. The height of elegance, n'est ce pas?

Wouldn't you think that six months the Freshmen would know, at least by sight, most of the Seniors? Or maybe Miss Joan Crawford Marshall was too engrossed in her John Gilbert to recognize Hodgson. The role of haughty May Queen, Edith, is quite unflitting, at your stage of the game.

Sally Reshard has inspired on someone the title for a promising sounding detective story—"The lady with a purple goatee." Dye your hair the same shade, Sal, and consider your fortune made.

Some people walk to Rhea's, some ride, skip, or run to Rhea's, but Maggie Tallaferro, as she so firmly expresses it, prefers to saunter out—whatever that might prove to be.

This proposition of yelling to the library from Fletcher has developed into quite a game. One is forced to detour by Sweet Briar House to the Inn. There you take a short cut by way of the lower hockey field and the lake, hesitate for a bite to eat and a smoke at Rhea's and arrive finally—if a bit breathless—at the library.

Hey, Belle, by the way, you needn't bother much over the people you want for the court. Every member of the student body has elected them for you and the thing should be comparatively simple now. They should also be able to offer some valuable suggestions as to the dresses, who should walk with whom, etc.

If this isn't enough, let me know—I'll write some more—the Lord knows what.

Hall of Fame.

We nominate to the Hall of Fame Belle Brockenbrough because no one could have accused her of "camp" thing. Because she is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Because beneath that Benda mask she passes real intelligence. And finally because she never raves on returning from her numerous week-ends.

South African Students. Visit America.

Over a month ago 37 students landed in this country from South Africa. These men and women, of English, French, and Dutch descent, spent a month of their long summer vacation seeing some of the outstanding features of American life. Their itinerary included eight days in New York City, visits to Washington, D. C., Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, Toronto, Montreal, and Boston, and short excursions to Annapolis and Baltimore, Ann Arbor, Niagara Falls, Vassar College, West Point and Yale University. In each city a local committee of American students guides met and entertained them.

Their special interests in America were first of all in the colleges and universities they visited, second in meeting people and discussing American life with the many families they visited and third in the "big business" of the United States, examples of which they saw in the Stock Exchange, a "talking" movie company, an automobile plant, the Stock Yards, a large department store, etc.

They were most enthusiastic over the United States, and have now sailed to England where they will spend ten days before returning to South Africa. This group was under the auspices of the National Student Federation of America, and this is one method of promoting international understanding among the youth of the world.

"The Permanent Student."

Columbia's "permanent student" has at last taken the degree which many men escape. No other American adhered so long to formal study for fifty years he was in the student body of the university. There was a story that he did not wish to surrender an annuity left him as long as he remained at school, yet it does not seem that this could have been his sole incentive, for he only got $2,500 a year and was ready at 30 to earn at least three times that much.

Surely here was a case of real yearning for culture. It is an old subject of debate whether that sort of culture is useful unless the person who acquires it passes it on. Might it not have been better if he had devoted his half century of patient effort to some single subject on which he might have become the peer of his generation. Best informed, capable of writing a treatise which should remain for years the authority. As it is, what becomes of all the struggle and the thought of the fifty-year pursuit of a culture which cannot be willed away.

Dr. Johnson of Brown On Swearing.

Dr. Johnson, of Brown University, has an interesting view point on swearing. He says that "profanity that was horrifying decades back is now ridiculous in its meaningless expression." Words have been corrupted until now they lack their old power and significance. Dr. Johnson says that profanity like Gaul is divided into three parts. Exclamatory profanity is almost a lost art. Assertive profanity

OPEN LETTER

Dear Editor:

In regard to the open letter which was published in the NEWS last week, I wish to assume full responsibility for a statement printed in "Campus Opinion" the week before and attributed to a senior, since this statement has caused a certain faculty member to write about that Senior in rather a scathing manner in last week's open letter.

I have since been advised that another member of the group with whom I was discussing the question of compulsory chapel at Sweet Briar made the statement which was printed in "Campus Opinion," and not the senior to whom I erroneously attributed it.

I hope this will help to clear the situation and may I say here that I am glad at least one member of the faculty is interested in "Campus Opinion."

Campus Opinion

Dear Editor:

I am very thankful to "A Member of the Faculty" for correcting a mistake in "Campus Opinion" on February 13th, which was attributed to the campus, an error arose very logically out of the conversation which caused when I was asked the question, "Do you favor compulsory chapel?" I replied "no," on the grounds that I believed religious practices to be a strictly individual matter and further, that I did not think the compulsion fostered religious feeling. A Catholic who was present at the time asked what would be done about her, as it was against her faith to attend religious services other than the Catholic. To that I replied with the reference to the campus, to the effect, that Sweet Briar is a non-sectarian college as proof that she would be allowed to pursue her faith unmolested. It is quite evident how these statements became jumbled and the error resulted.

I am sure the Faculty member for correcting this false impression.

—Meredith Ferguson.

has lost its power and he notes here that to answer a question with the simple "I did" is far more powerful than to say "By all the stars in Heaven, by Jove, I did so." Denunciatory profanity, the third type, is almost gone for nowadays "I" is lost to seriously.

"Emphasis is lost to the modern generation," he says. Profanity by overuse has lost its power of emphasis just as constantly used headlines have done.

The Sciences Will Unite.

Yale University is taking a great step forward in education. It is making plans for the foundation of an Institute of Human Relations in which all Yale's resources for the scientific investigation of man's behavior from the mental and physical, individual and social standpoints will be concentrated. The Institute is designed to bring together sociologists, biologists, psychologists and economists who will by their cooperation correlate knowledge of the mind and body and of individual and group behavior. The story of the work of the Institute will hold an appointment in the University department so that the work of the two bodies may be joined as a whole.

Girl Scout Leader Course Will Again Be Given.

From March 4 to 18 Miss Anne Roos of the Girl Scouts will be at Sweet Briar to give the Leadership Course to students interested. This class will meet three times each week and the fee for the two weeks will be one dollar ($1.00).

For students not already familiar with this course, which Miss Roos has given here twice before, several points may be added. Little if any, outside preparation is needed for the class meetings as most of the work is done there. The training does not in any way commit one to Girl Scout work and while it is valuable for that purpose, it is equally useful in girls' club, camp work and other lines of a similar nature. Those who wish to take the course should sign on the bulletin board in Academic. The time of meeting will be arranged later, but will probably be late afternoon or evening.

Sweet Briar A True

Amazonia, Says Sforza

said: "Blamarch was a genius, followed by a comedy-William II. He pointed out that the failure of Germany and Russia, to win the Great War was due to an astonishing military technique unsupported by a national spirit which can thrive only in democratic nations such as the United States, France, England and Italy.

Like Count Keyserling who visited the College last year, he was much interested in personal talks with the students as he has a son and daughter of his own, whose presence in America during their formative years he considers a great privilege.

In discussing sport, the Count, who is an enthusiastic polo player, declared that the present universal popularity of golf is a sign of its ultimate decline and commenting of the English love of sport, said: "An Englishman may, in perhaps, a merchant, or a statesman, but the most of his life he spends in chasing a ball."

Avoids Speaking of Fascists

The Count was non-committal on matters pertaining to the Fascist regime. He avoided answers to questions on the character of Mussolini or how long his rule might last. When asked about the recent treaty between Church and State he replied: "In the light of history, what treaty has been lasting?"

Sweet Briar A 'Feudal State'

To this keen Italian aristocrat, Sweet Briar was a 'feudal state' in Virginia and the girls whom he saw riding horseback were the 'Virginia Amazons'. The youth, happiness, and informality of the girls attracted him at once.

In his conversation with Miss Gibbons, Count Sforza remarked about the happiness of the American girl. When Miss Gibbons mentioned the happiness of the Italian child, he replied:

"It would be ideal to be a child in Italy, a young man in France, a horse in England, and a young girl in America."

While standing on the arcade between Reid and Grammer, Count Sforza looked up and said:

"There is a girl in every window." Laler he seemed impressed that here the "girls dress to make their best friends jealous."

At the end of the lecture, the Count's reaction to the questions which the girls asked him was shown when he observed:

"How daring in their questions they are," he said. To the mind accustomed to the subtleties of European diplomatic life, their frankness, naivete, and crudity seemed very hard to understand.

Impressed With Our Custom of Flagging Trains

Count Sforza also appreciated the a childlike of this "Amazonia" and the beauty of the surroundings. However, he was more impressed with the fact that at Sweet Briar station, we are able to flag trains. When this was impossible for the late train on which he wished to depart, he said:

"In Amazonia, we may flag a train for a queen, but not for a count."

Count Sforza, besides leaving behind him the memory of a keen and most charming personality, taught us all a lesson in practical diplomacy by his replies to the girls' questions at the close of the lecture.

CAMPUS OPINION

"Do you envy Anne Morrow?"

Jean Countryman, Sophomore: "I envy her in some ways, but I don't believe I'd enjoy the publicity of being Lindbergh's wife."

Dorothy Boyle, Sophomore: "Yes, I envy her in some ways. But Lindbergh is not exactly the type of man I'd like to marry."

Alice Barber, Junior: "Oh yes, I envy her, a lot!"

Mary D. Lyon, Junior: "No! I don't think I envy her very much. Lindbergh is liable to be killed nearly any time."

One of the male faculty members was heard to remark the other day that now that Lindbergh is engaged only the "Prince of Wales" and Dr. Connor remain.
